finance, housing, work & employment, civil rights & civic engagement and economic well-being. We will take Windrush generation history and culture into schools and youth communities, so younger generations understand and value their heritage and its contributions to Britain. The activities will connect the past to the present, celebrate and share learning across a diverse community.

The programme includes a cricket tournament and schools programme and a series of cross-generational conversations in the community. The Council's culture budget supported the recent intergenerational Caribbean baking project for elders and young people, a Windrush recipe book and a celebratory event at Stoke Newington Town Hall on 22 June to mark the UK's first National Windrush Day.
